Definition and concept of Value and Self-Identity

3 elements that make up value:

- Belief System – A solid understanding of belief systems.
- History – The importance of appreciating the nation's history. Eliminated from history by colonialism.
- Culture – Values are formed from culture; Cultivating values, judgment of right and wrong that is followed in life.

Definition of Values

- Values are a guide to social action constructs that state certain actions as appropriate, inappropriate, acceptable, and unacceptable.

- Contains normative moral/ethical components, and forms a guide for actions, attitudes, and objectives for which humans strive.

Concept of Values

- Values play a major role in the lives of individuals and culture/society and can be characterized either at the individual or group level, i.e. community members, organizations, religious groups.

- Collective/social values, also known as cultural values, represent the objectives that members of society are encouraged to adhere to and pursue in order to justify their actions.

- Individual values, also called personal values, are principles that govern human life, guide, adapt, and direct behavior, actions and attitudes.

Values and Religion

- Throughout human history and evolution, religion has been found to be one of the most important and comprehensive social institutions, touching and shaping almost all areas of culture and society.

- Religion provides humans with a frame of reference for the organization of life in general, whether individual or group.

Positive Values

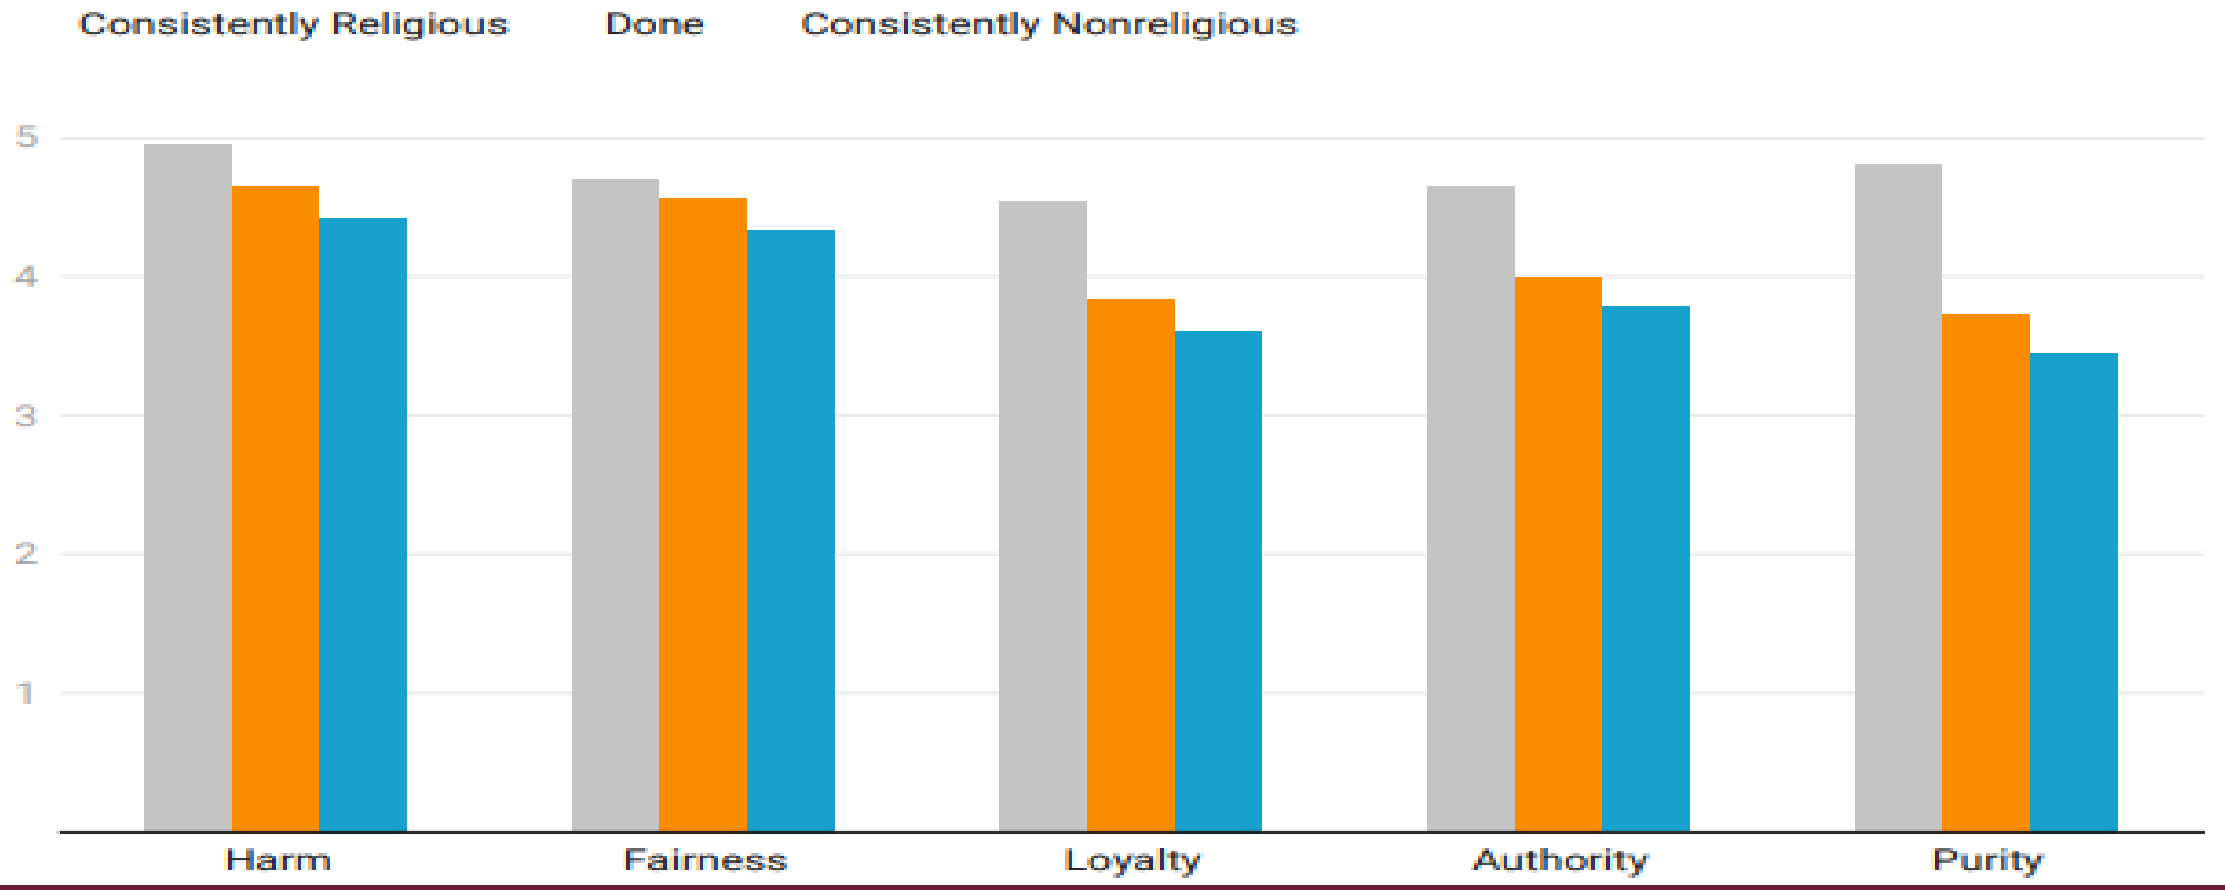

- The religious beliefs of each individual and how strong their religious beliefs are, are important aspects in the formation of personal and social identity.

- Belief and value systems are intrinsically linked in all aspects of human life

The influence of religion on moral foundations

Religion's influence on moral foundations lingers among the 'formerly religious'

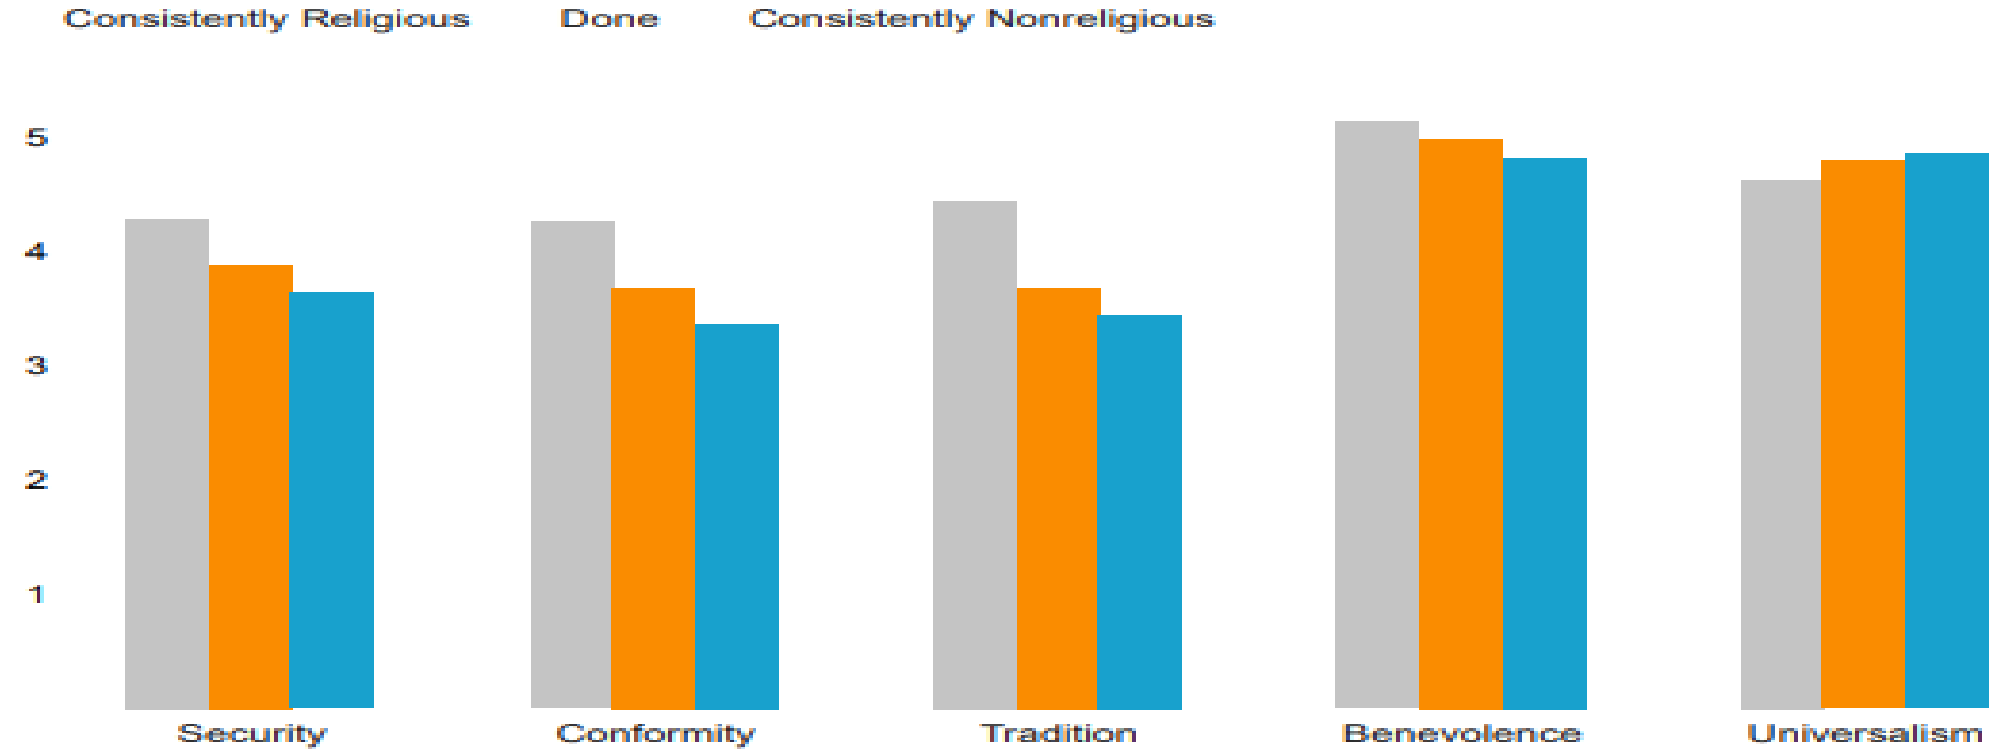

Respondents self-identifying as "religious" were most likely to endorse each of the five moral values common to psychology research, followed by the "formerly religious."

The Influence of Religion on Personal Values

Religion's effect on personal values lingers among the 'formerly religious'

Young adults who self-identify as "formerly religious"' usually fall in between religious and nonreligious peers in their support of several social values, evidence of the "religious residue effect."

Data collected by National Study of Youth and Religion. In this figure, taken from the fourth round of interviews, participants ranged in age from 22 to 29.

Positive Values

- All religions and community cultures which are the largest entities in our country namely the Malays, Chinese and Indians call and invite their followers to behave with noble values.

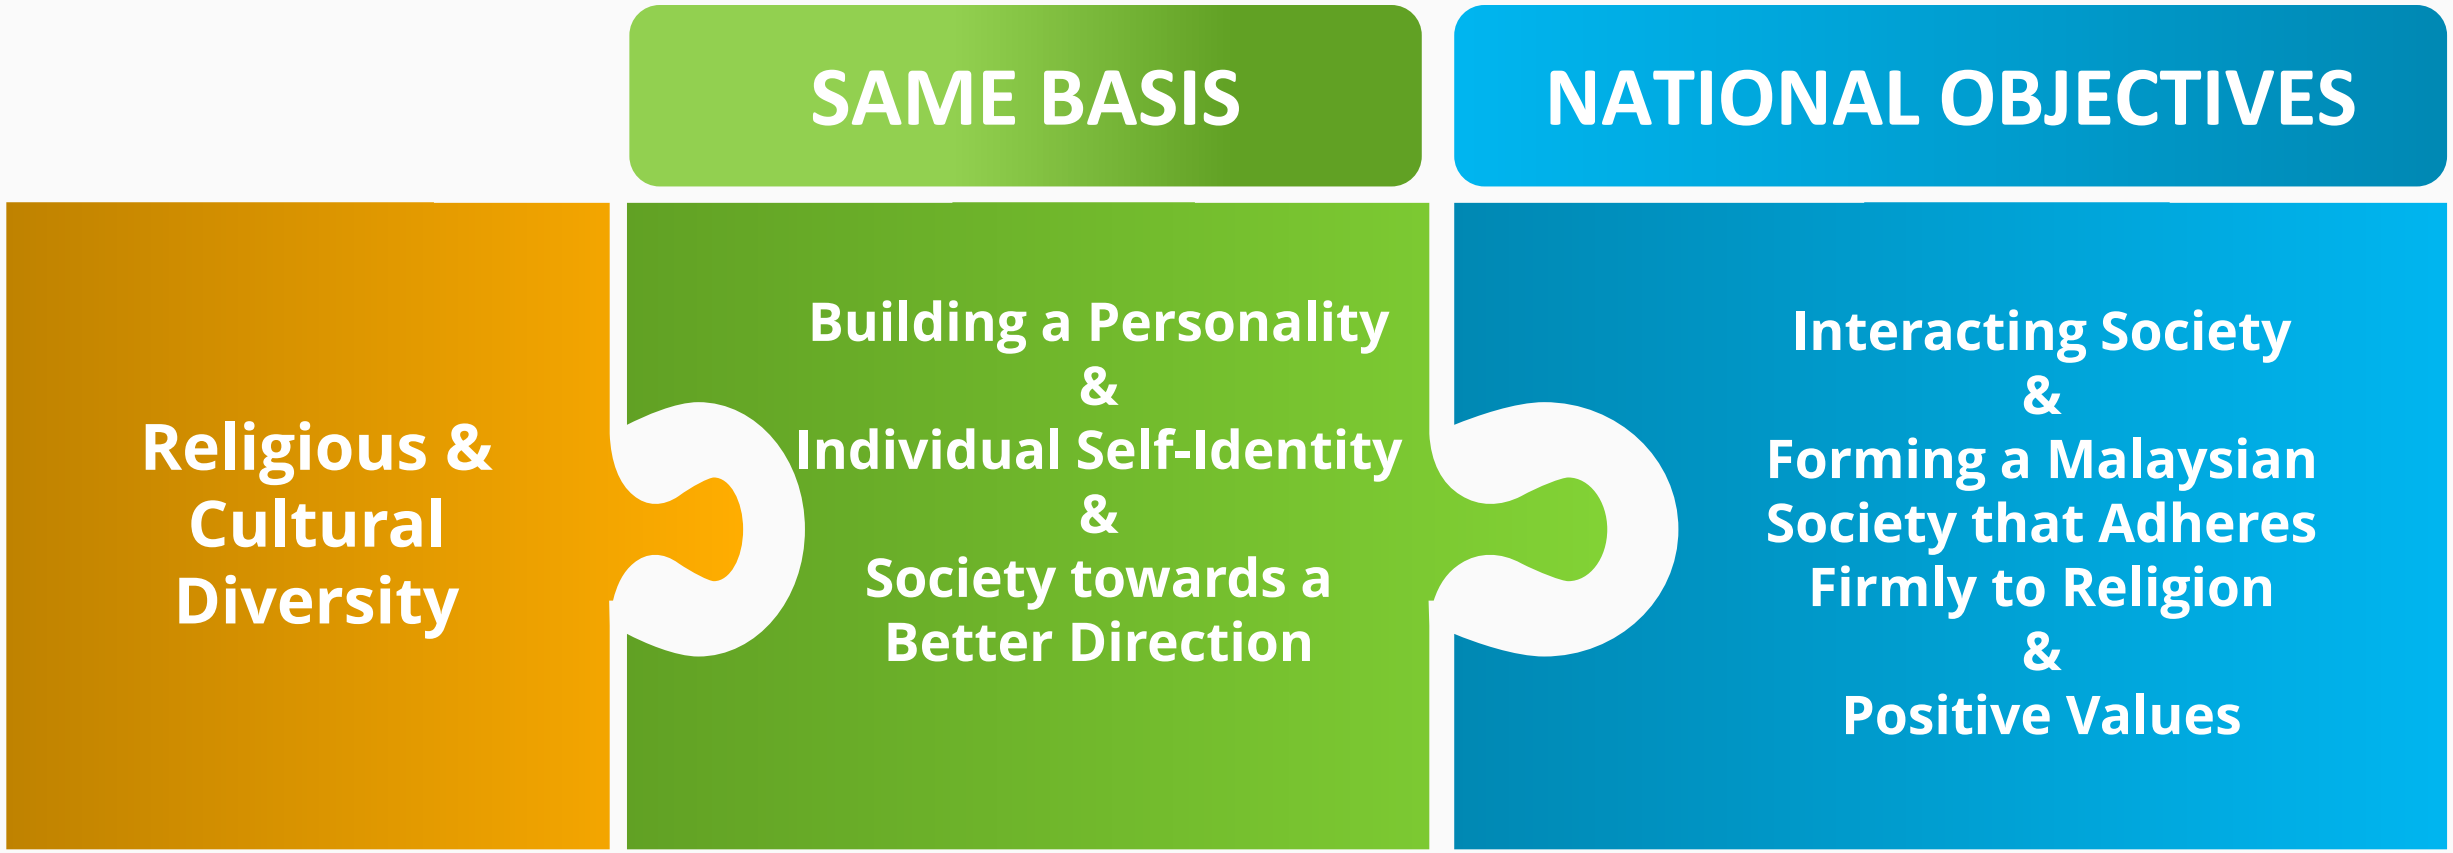

- The absence of appreciation of positive values in society causes their behavior to be directed in a negative direction.

Positive Values

- Appreciation of the positive values of the Malaysian citizens focuses on moral issues and positive values in a multi-racial society towards the birth of a Malaysian nation that is progressive, scientific and living united as one.

- The three largest ethnic groups, the Malays, Chinese and Indians, practice their respective cultures, customs, religions and languages.

- Malaysian society also has a culture that allows them to interact with each other.

ISLAM

The positive value of trust in God is the main axis of its followers, which is to implement two main pillars, namely the Pillars of Islam and the Pillars of Faith.

These pillars are the guides to the Muslim community in living life as a Muslim to consider what is right and what is wrong.

The value of mutual respect among human beings is also emphasized, which is respect for Allah, parents, believers, neighbors and other people.

The respect shows noble morality as taught by the Islamic religion and preserving human relations.

Islam also applies values such as patience, moderation, courtesy, justice and many more.

CHRISTIAN

The main teaching of Christianity is to fulfill the Ten Commandments of God.

These ten commandments include many commands, prohibitions, reprimands, and virtues for Christians e.g., the value of honesty and not lying or bearing false witness.

The value of honoring God, parents and fellow human beings is to love each other whether friends or enemies.

Teaching generosity which is helping people at all times without expecting anything in return.

The virtue of humility is also the main focus of Christian teachings.

Not arrogant of one's own abilities and knowledge instead should look at others as equal to themselves.

Noble practices also symbolize the application of positive Christian values so that it gives good to others.

BUDDHA

Buddhism highlights the Noble Eightfold Path which serves as a guide to noble virtues.

It includes aspects of thinking, speaking, and doing the right things so that Buddhists can escape from the desires of lust and the temptations of the world.

By doing it, a person will always behave, speak, think well and positively.

Buddhists are also forbidden to lie, drink alcohol, commit adultery, kill and betray fellow human beings.

Appreciation of these things shows the high moral foundation of Buddhism.

These things are abhorred because they lead to harmful effects and consequences in society.

Buddhists should also not have negative thoughts, but instead should do good and be loving everyone.

HINDU

The main concept of this religion is to believe in the law of karma which means that good deeds are rewarded with good and vice versa.

The concept of moksa which means the highest happiness is also the main tenet of the followers of this religion.

Achieving the level of moksa will not cause a person to be reborn in the form of an animal, human or other living things.

Hinduism emphasizes values such as patience, controlling lust and anger, forgiving, tolerance and many more.

The practice of these values is in line with the Upanishads that teach morality such as always giving, showing love, avoiding feelings of hatred and envy, respecting elders and not wanting other people's things.

These values are very compatible with everyone's desire to achieve moksa and be free from self-will. It can also prevent someone from acting out of bounds and causing chaos.

SIKH

The main concept of the Sikh religion is monotheism, which is the belief and worship of one God.

A person's last life must be united with God in order for there to be atonement.

Apart from belief in God, Sikhism also emphasizes respect for religious teachers, a simple life, tolerance between religions, showing love to others and so on.

The Three Pillars of Life and the Way of Life are also the basis of values and morals in Sikhism.

These beliefs can prevent an individual from doing bad things in social life.

CONFUCIANISM

Confucianism and Taoism are generally followed by a number Chinese people.

The main teachings of the Confucianism belief is to do good at all times and maintain good relations with others.

An individual should maintain friendliness and close relationships with each other by doing good and respecting others (shu).

Showing love to other people is also important in maintaining relationships with everyone.

TAOISME

Taoist beliefs revolve around social dimensions such as wisdom and age.

Spiritual matters become the main focus of this belief which is the immortality of the soul through charity ceremonies.

This belief advocates the concept of ying and yang balance in the universe. Ying and yang are able to control the imbalance of nature so that harmony is maintained.

Respect and courtesy are the main virtues in Taoism.

Humans must understand each other so that mutual understanding can be achieved.

A person should practice the value of moderation in speech and behavior to maintain self-discipline.

Taoism emphasizes the relationship between humans and the universe, so careful care of the environment must be done.

ANIMISME

Belief in spirits or spirits.

This belief is the basis for the emergence of various new religions and has existed since ancient times.

People who adhere to this belief believe that every thing in this world has a spirit that must be respected for their own interests.

Animism fosters respect in its adherents.

Worship rituals in this belief create a sense of respect for the things around them and this causes them to appreciate and protect the environment well.

Furthermore, animism emphasizes the observance of strict taboos. This will allow the formation of high self-discipline.

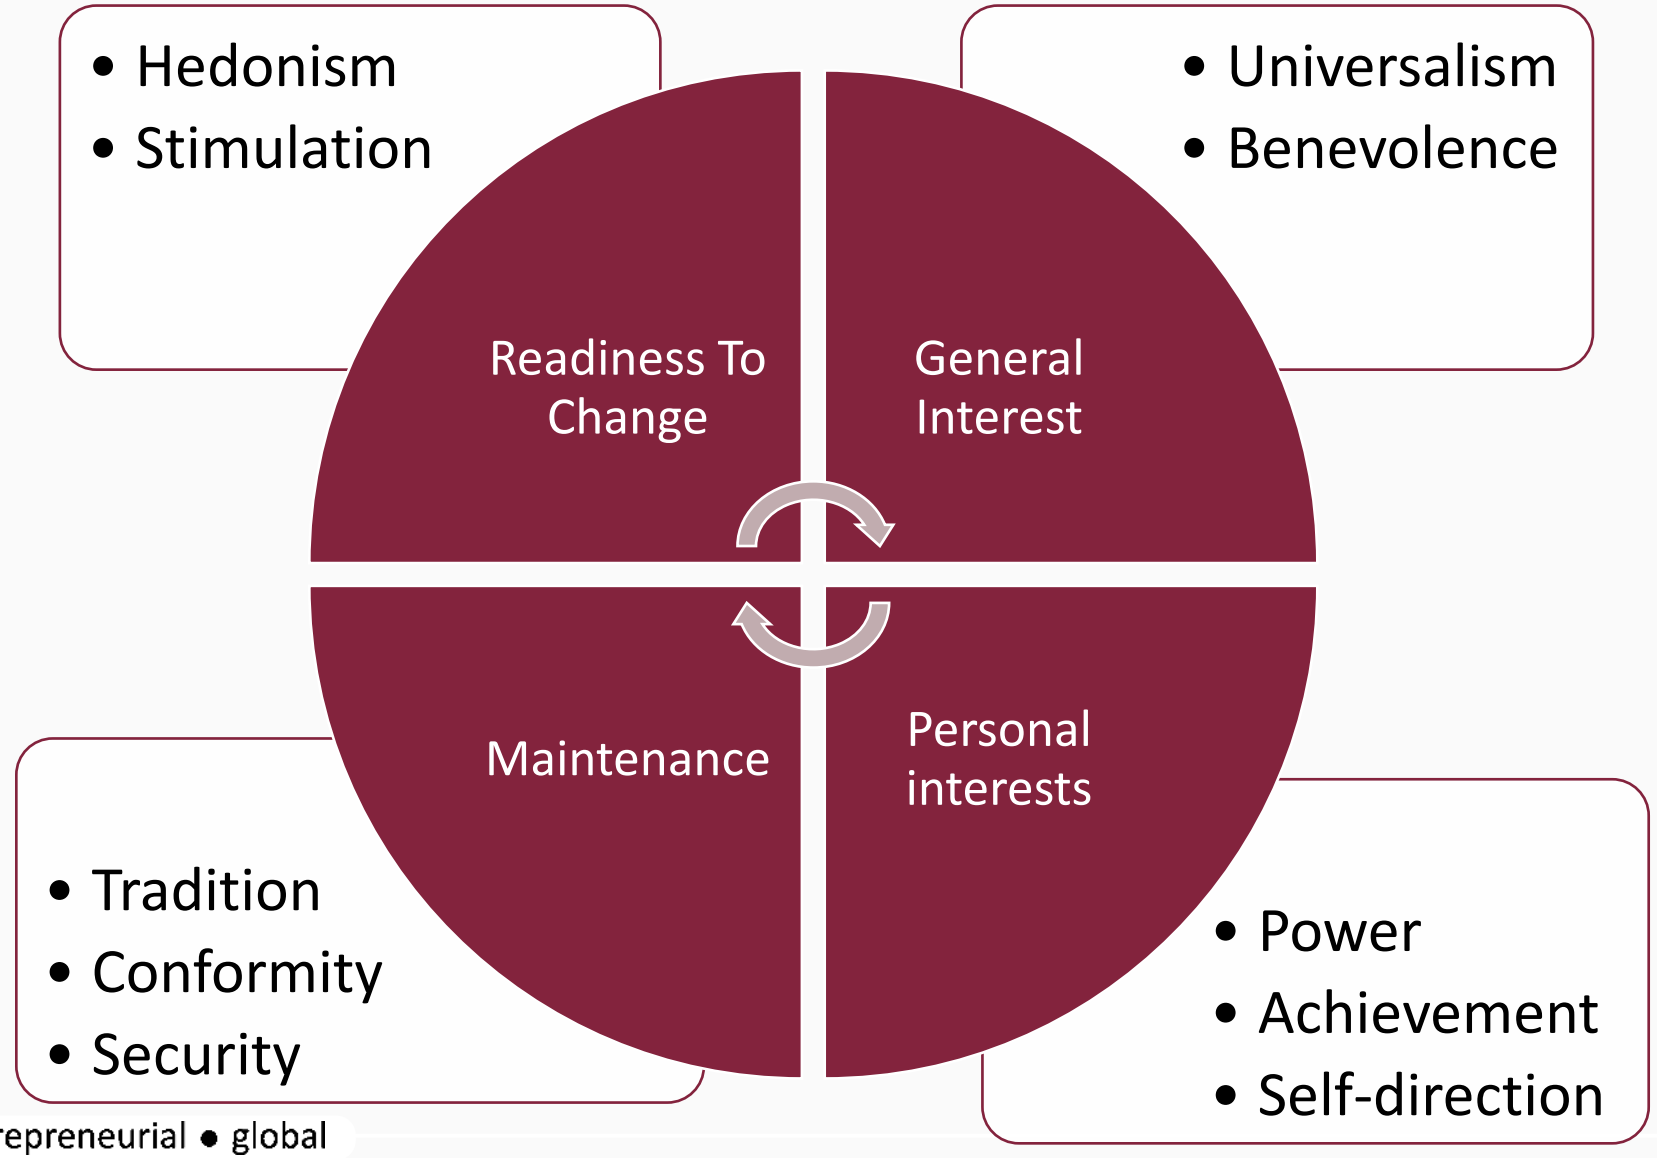

Adherents of animism strongly believe in taboos that they will remind each other and rebuke any actions that may violate the taboos.

POSITIVE VALUES

- The diversity of religions in Malaysia has produced uniqueness in our society. Even though Malaysians follow different religions and beliefs, we still live in harmony together until today.

- Every religion and belief teaches its own values. Every believer should try to practice these values for the sake of harmony and peace together.
